Welcome to tonight’s performance in the APT Master Series. We are delighted to be the presenting partner of the SSO’s flagship series and to be supporting these performances of Mahler’s Third Symphony with David Robertson.

This monumental work offers a whole concert’s worth of emotion. But above all, it is a musical meditation on Nature – beautiful and wild. For Mahler, Nature meant the mountains and lakes of Austria. But his travels took him as far afield as North America, where he conducted the New York Philharmonic. While there he took a side trip to Niagara Falls. That evening, with the roar of the falls still in his ears, he conducted Beethoven’s Pastoral, stepping off the podium at the end to say ‘At last a fortissimo!’ His point? That the experience of music can be even more overpowering than Nature at her mightiest.

Here at APT we think you can enjoy the power of both! Music in the concert hall and unforgettable experiences of the natural world when you travel. With towering mountain peaks, pristine wilderness and remarkable wildlife, Canada and Alaska evoke a sense of wonder and our expertise allows you to explore these extraordinary destinations in luxury. With hundreds of different travel experiences on offer, you can make Canada truly yours, whether you want to hear the roar of the Niagara Falls or enjoy a thriving artistic community such as Banff in the Rockies.

We hope you find tonight’s performance of Mahler 3 truly inspiring and we look forward to seeing you at future APT Master Series concerts during the year.

MAHLER

Mahler is now regarded as one of the greatest symphonists of the turn of the 20th century. But during his life his major career was as a conductor – he was effectively a ‘summer composer’, and his Third Symphony was composed in Steinbach, an Alpine retreat near Salzburg. Mahler’s symphonies tend to be large-scale, requiring huge orchestras and often lasting more than an hour. They cover a tremendous emotional range, and have sometimes been described as ‘Janus-like’ in the way they blend romantic and modern values, self-obsession and universal expression, idealism and irony.

THIRD SYMPHONY
The Third Symphony (1896) is not only Mahler’s longest symphony but the longest symphony to have won acceptance in the standard repertoire. It is organised in six movements, of which the half-hour first movement forms the first part of the symphony and the remaining five the second. The vocal texts are drawn from Nietzsche (the ‘Midnight Song’, sung by the mezzo-soprano in the fourth movement) and from the German folk collection Des Knaben Wunderhorn (Youth’s Magic Horn) in the fifth movement, where children’s voices are introduced to sing of angels and heavenly joy. The unusual structure is further emphasised by the long slow movement which concludes the symphony.
It is still possible to hear the remark ‘a great fuss about nothing’ made after Mahler performances. This response is less common now than when Mahler’s music was emerging, in the 1960s, from some 40 years in the shadows, but he still has the capacity to divide audiences, with a consistency rivaled only by Wagner and Bruckner.

It is true that Mahler’s symphonies are ‘a great fuss’ – they are often lengthy, sometimes occupying a whole program, like this evening, and demand large orchestral (and sometimes vocal and choral) forces, each symphony cradling within its structure a musical universe spanning a hushed quietude and a primal roaring. So ‘fuss,’ yes, but it cannot be said that they are ‘about nothing’; in their extravagant rhetoric, their journey through an intense inner life, and their concomitant sense of heightened tonal drama, we feel these pieces must be ‘about something’, and as such they continue to have meaning for audiences all over the world.

While Mahler had a fear of his symphonic programs being taken too literally, there is no doubt that a well-spring of creativity flowed from the explicit, interior dramatic structures he devised for much of his music. This is particularly so in his first four symphonies, which are infused with the words and spirit of the collection of German folk poetry called Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Youth’s Magic Horn). As writer Philip Barford has put it: ‘The Wunderhorn symphonies are all other-worldly. They unashamedly proclaim faith in love, redemption and the life in heaven.’

Mahler’s second symphony – the Resurrection – charts a course from the deep despair of earthy death to the radiant certainty of a heavenly afterlife. The Third is equally ambitious, more complex and, while calling for slightly smaller forces, is far longer: at some 95 minutes it is one of the longest symphonies in the standard orchestral repertoire, the first movement alone being longer than, say Mozart’s Jupiter or Haydn’s London symphonies. Its length is matched by a program of tremendous scope, for in it Mahler attempts, in Mosco Carner’s words, ‘to show the birth and growth of consciousness from an initially soulless nature to living things – flowers, animals and man – leading to the sphere of the Supreme Being’ as the creator of creation. In August 1895, at the point where he had finished sketching all the movements except the first, he outlined this program for the work:

Each Mahler symphony cradles within its structure a musical universe spanning a hushed quietude and a primal roaring.
THE JOYFUL KNOWLEDGE
A Summer Morning’s Dream

I  Summer marches in
II  What the meadow flowers tell me
III  What the creatures of the forest tell me
IV  What night tells me (mankind)
V  What the morning bells tell me (the angels)
VI  What love tells me
VII  The heavenly life (what the child tells me)

After he composed the first movement the following summer he changed the subtitle to ‘A Summer Noonday’s Dream’ and dropped the seventh movement, which became the finale, and the well-spring, of the Fourth Symphony. He deleted the Nietzschean title ‘The Joyful Knowledge’ and re-titled the first movement ‘Pan Awakes. Summer Comes Marching In [Bacchic Procession]’. Since he often found his programs taken too literally, he eventually withdrew the descriptive movement titles altogether, but while he was at work on the piece the program’s link to the music was absolute. In other words, by the end of the northern summer of 1896 Mahler had completed a deeply personal, epic meditation on nature as a metaphor for human suffering and triumph, on nature as a key to faith. To begin a symphony of epic dimensions by invoking pagan divinity and to end it with a hymn to what Mahler called ‘blessed faith’; to set a text by Nietzsche, as Mahler does in the fourth movement, and then to reject his pessimism with a shining, vigorous life force a few moments later – these are the ways of a man determined to do things his own way.

Mahler’s correspondence at the time of his most intensive work on this symphony tells us plainly of the high task he had set himself:

I think it strange how most people, in speaking of nature, only think of flowers, birds, the forest etc. No one seems to know anything of Dionysus, the great god Pan. [In my symphony] It is the world itself, nature as a whole, which, so to speak, is awakened to music out of an unfathomable silence...Just imagine a work of such magnitude that it actually mirrors the whole world — and is, so to speak, only an instrument, played on by the universe...My symphony will be something the like of which the world has never heard.

Making allowances for Mahler’s likely manic depressive personality, and for the fact that he had just experienced his first major public success as a symphonic composer with a performance of the Resurrection in Berlin, one almost gasps at such audacity. Had Mahler been all vaulting ambition — a kind of musical Malcolm Turnbull — his music would now be profoundly obscure. But it was his genius to find a voice to match his dreams. To some commentators, that voice is one into which all the triumphs and tragedies of the 19th century poured themselves; to others it is prophetic of the calamities of the century to come. In this light, it is important to note that Mahler had a dual career as a conductor and composer, and that while he was highly regarded by his contemporaries as a performer, his successes as a composer were intermittent at best, and that in the decades after his death, his music was largely forgotten.

His relationship to his musical heritage is salient here also. For all his indebtedness to Bruckner, Brahms, Schubert, indeed the Austro-German tradition — and of course the music he loved as a conductor, which included Puccini and Tchaikovsky — we can hear his determination to find his own musical solutions to the questions he wanted answers to so fiercely. As composer and commentator Donald Tovey put it in the 1930s: ‘We cannot fall back upon the device of classifying Mahler as one of the conductor-composers who drifted into composition to display their vast memories as experienced conductors.’ Among the first things an attentive listener will notice, for example, are his then-radical references to what he called his ‘trivialities,’ the found objects of the musical life of his time: military marches, Austrian country dances, woodwinds imitating hurdy-gurdies and simultaneous musical events taking place together, ‘out of time’. These ‘intrusions’ were part of Mahler’s universe some years before it became apparent that, on the other side of the Atlantic, Charles Ives was making similar explorations.

It was Tovey who described Mahler as a composer without inhibitions, and this is a key to understanding his broad appeal. His fine ear for orchestral colour, his sure understanding of how to dramatise each musical episode, means that every moment of universal triumph, every presentiment of cosmic catastrophe, every encounter with an object of almost unbearable loveliness, is made palpable to us in his work. After hearing the Third
Symphony for the first time, the young Arnold Schoenberg wrote to Mahler and said: ‘I sensed...truth, the most ruthless truth!’

Listening Guide

Mahler’s grandest, strangest, wildest symphony begins with that extraordinary picture of nature awakening from its slumber. As writer and broadcaster Stephen Johnson has written: ‘Attempts to make sense of its structure along traditional formal lines usually end in sad confusion.’ In broad terms, this fervent fantasy makes three kinds of music: the proud, sometimes raucous sounds of nature roused to life (as in the very opening and the laughingly triumphant final minutes); the almost subterranean music given to the lower brass to suggest nature in its inert, primordial state, and the rapturous, and occasionally terrifying murmurs on strings and woodwinds suggesting the heartbeat of nature and the leadership of Pan. As writer William Mann said of this movement: ‘You and I, as well as the daisies and the dinosaurs and the volcanic rocks are there.’

The minuet that follows is a musical flower picture, the serenity of which is nudged only by a swift-moving central trio that evokes the spirit of Mendelssohn. The third movement, the scherzo, is more complex, even enigmatic, as the twittering of the forest animals is interrupted by a distant solo on the post-horn. In Western Europe, for generations before Mahler’s time, post-horns were used by postilions and guards on mail coaches to announce arrival and departure. Mahler’s use of it here is open to many interpretations; the one that seems most plausible sees it as the first ‘human’ moment in the work, the expression of the tender ecstasy of human feeling on being at one with the world of nature. It is also wonderfully evocative of the heat and haze of high summer, so it is apt that Pan makes an unexpected re-appearance in the movement’s final moments.

Illustration by Moritz von Schwind for Des Knaben Wunderhorn (c.1850)
The next two movements form a wondrous duality. The human voice enters to present the symphony’s dark night of the soul, in a section of profound stillness. Between each line of Nietzsche’s poem of human doubt, taken from Thus Spake Zarathustra – ‘the world is deep, and deeper than the day imagined’ – we are to imagine a note of the bell striking midnight. The fifth movement, the joyous song of the morning bells, brings in the boys’ and women’s voices for a setting of the Wunderhorn poem ‘Three angels were singing a sweet song’. The mezzo-soprano joins them for the darker middle section, in which the text focuses on sin and repentance.

The symphony’s progression from inanimate darkness to divine light is made complete by the slowly unfurling, radiant finale, which begins as a hushed adagio, as if, in the words of novelist Colin Wilson, ‘the world has established a truce’. Gradually, through moments of tremendous longing and recollections of music from the first movement, the work ends in hymn-like glory.

In addition to the vocal soloist and choirs, Mahler’s Third Symphony calls for four flutes (all doubling piccolo), four oboes (one doubling cor anglais), five clarinets (one doubling bass clarinet and two doubling E flat clarinet) and four bassoons (one doubling contrabassoon); eight horns, four trumpets (with one player responsible for the posthorn part, played offstage); four trombones and tuba; two timpani and a large percussion section; two harps and strings.

The SSO gave the first Australian performance of the second movement of this symphony in 1963, conducted by Charles Mackerras. Following the Australian premiere [given by the MSO and Willem van Otterloo in 1967], we gave our first performance of the complete symphony in a 1969 Town Hall Proms concert conducted by John Hopkins. Lauris Elms was the soloist with Sydney Philharmonia Choir and the choir of Sydney Grammar School. Our most recent performance was in 2010 as part of Vladimir Ashkenazy’s Mahler Odyssey, with Lilli Paasikivi and tonight’s choirs.

4. Sehr langsam. Misterioso
MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO

O Mensch, gib Acht!
Was spricht die tiefe Mitternacht?
Ich schlief! Aus tiefem Traum bin ich erwacht!
Die Welt ist tief!
Und tiefer als der Tag gedacht!
Tief ist ihr Weh!
Lust, tiefer noch als Herzeleid!
Weh spricht: Vergeh!
Doch alle Lust will Ewigkeit,
Will tiefe, tiefe Ewigkeit.

O Man, take heed!
What does the deep midnight say?
I slept. From deep dreaming I was wakened!
The world is deep,
And deeper than the day imagined!
Deep is the grief!
Longing, deeper still than heartache!
Grief says: Go hence!
But all longing craves eternity,
Craves deep, deep eternity.

THREE-PART CHORUS, CHILDREN’S CHORUS, MEZZO-SOPRANO SOLO

Es sungen drei Engel einen süßen Gesang
Mit freuden es selig in dem Himmel klang,
Sie jauchzten fröhlich auch dabei,
Daß Petrus sei von Sünden frei,
Und als der Herr Jesus zu Tische saß,
Mit seinen zwölf Jüngern das Abendmahl aß,
Da sprach der Herr Jesus: ‘Was stehst du denn hier?
Wenn ich dich anseh’, so weinest du mir!’
Und sollt’ ich nicht weinen Du gütiger Gott,
Du sollst ja nicht weinen!
Ich hab’ übertreten die zehn Gebot’. Ich gehe und weine ja bitterlich,
Ach komm’ und erbarme dich über mich!
Hast du denn übertreten die zehen Gebot,
So fall’ auf die Knie und bete zu Gott,
Lieber nur Gott in alle Zeit!
So wirst du erlangen die himmlische Freud’.
Die himmlische Freud’ ist eine selige Stadt,
Die himmlische Freud’; die kein Ende mehr hat!
Die himmlische Freude war Petro bereit’t
Durch Jesum und Allen zur Seligkeit.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION © SYMPHONY AUSTRALIA

Three angels were singing a sweet song,
With blessing and joy it rang in Heaven,
For joy too they shouted
That Peter was set free from sin.
And when the Lord Jesus sat at table,
With his twelve disciples at the evening meal,
Lord Jesus said: Why stand you here?
When I look at you, you weep before me.
And should I not weep, thou God of goodness,
No, you mustn’t weep!
I have broken the ten commandments.
I go my way and weep bitterly,
Ah, come and have mercy on me!
If you have broken the ten commandments
Then fall on your knee and pray to God,
Love only God for all time!
So you will attain heavenly joy.
Heavenly joy is a blessed city,
Heavenly joy, that knows no end!
Heavenly joy was granted to Peter,
Through Jesus, and for the delight of all.

Susan Graham rose to the highest echelon of international performers within a few years of her professional debut, mastering an astonishing repertoire along the way. Her operatic roles range from Monteverdi’s Poppea to Sister Helen Prejean in Heggie’s Dead Man Walking, a role written specially for her, and her recital repertoire is so broad that 14 composers from Purcell to Sondheim are represented on her recent album, Virgins, Vixens & Viragos. This distinctly American artist is also one of the foremost exponents of French vocal music – in both opera and concert – and has received the French government’s Chevalier de la Légion d’Honneur.

Her earliest operatic successes were in Mozart trouser roles such as Cherubino (The Marriage of Figaro), followed by Octavian (Der Rosenkavalier) and the Composer (Ariadne auf Naxos). These brought her to prominence on the world’s major opera stages, including the Metropolitan Opera, Lyric Opera of Chicago, San Francisco Opera, Covent Garden, Paris Opera, La Scala, Bavarian State Opera, Vienna State Opera and Salzburg Festival.

Recent highlights include Dido in Les Troyens (Lyric Opera of Chicago), the Washington National Opera revival of Dead Man Walking (now as the convict’s mother), Erika in Barber’s Vanessa (Berlin) and her role debut as Countess Geschwitz in Lulu (Metropolitan). Concert performances have included galas with the San Francisco Symphony and New York Philharmonic, Des Knaben Wunderhorn at Carnegie Hall, Octavian to Renée Fleming’s Marschallin in Der Rosenkavalier (Boston), and Songs of the Auvergne (Philadelphia), as well as presentations with Malcolm Martineau of Frauenliebe und -leben Variations, a recital inspired by Schumann’s song cycle.

She has also created leading roles in Harbison’s Great Gatsby and Picker’s An American Tragedy; she made her Dallas Opera debut as Tina in Argento’s Aspern Papers, and headed an all-star cast as Sycorax in the Met’s Baroque pasticcio The Enchanted Island. She has starred as Prince Orlofsky in Die Fledermaus (Houston Grand Opera, Santa Fe Opera and Metropolitan Opera) and in the title role of The Merry Widow (Metropolitan), and made an acclaimed musical theatre debut in The King and I in Paris.

Her distinguished discography includes a series of lauded solo albums, including Un frisson français, C’est ça la vie, c’est ça l’amour! La Belle Époque, and a Grammy Award-winning collection of Ives songs.

Next week in Sydney, Susan Graham can be heard in Ravel’s Shéhérazade.
Sydney Philharmonia Choirs presents the art of choral singing at the highest standard, and develops the talents of those with a passion for singing. Founded in 1920, it has become Australia’s finest choral organisation. Led by Brett Weymark since 2003, Sydney Philharmonia comprises six choirs performing repertoire from choral classics to musical theatre and commissions by Australian composers. Sydney Philharmonia presents its own annual season and collaborates with leading conductors, soloists and orchestras in Australia and overseas. In 2002, Sydney Philharmonia was the first Australian choir to sing at the BBC Proms (Mahler Eight under Simon Rattle), returning again in 2010. The choirs perform annually in the SSO’s subscription series, and this year’s collaborations have included Brahms songs, the Last Night of the Proms and Debussy’s Pelléas et Mélisande. In November Sydney Philharmonia will appear in Belshazzar’s Feast and a new oratorio by Péter Eötvös, conducted by David Robertson. Highlights of Sydney Philharmonia’s 2017 season include Bach’s St Matthew Passion, Rossini’s Stabat Mater, Tudor Portraits (in August), Elgar’s Dream of Gerontius and Handel’s Messiah.
